Raw-milk lovers fear rule will limit product

■ New state law curbs the amount of bacteria in the nonpasteurized dairy item, producers say standard is hard to meet

By Michelle Locke

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERKELEY — People who consume raw milk oppose new dairy standards set to take effect next month in California that they say could outlaw some of their preferred products.

The new law does not create an outright ban on raw milk, but producers say they think it could dry up supplies by setting new bacteria limits they say are difficult to meet.

"There's quite a ruckus right now," said Mark McAfee, founder of Fresno-based Organic Pastures Dairy Co., the larger of two raw-milk producers in California. "This is a huge issue, and it goes directly to consumer choice. Consumers are fed up with the government being in their kitchens, and they want to be able to make their independent choices about food they want to eat."

State officials, on the other hand, say that producers should be able to meet the standards, which they maintain are necessary for consumer safety.

The new standard, part of AB1735, takes effect in January, setting a limit of no more than 10 coliforms per milliliter. Coliforms are a group of bacteria commonly found in the environment, most of which do not cause disease. Pasteurization, in which milk is heated, kills many bacteria, but in raw milk they still are alive.

"We found that coliform count is indicative of a healthy and clean and wholesome production process for raw milk," said Steve Lyle, spokesman for the state Department of Food and Agriculture.

Raw-milk producers say their product already is tested for dangerous bacteria such as E. coli and salmonella.

They contend that the presence of other coliforms in the milk simply are part of what makes their product unique and, in their view, more healthful, by promoting a stronger immune system.

"There's a bacteria paranoia in our country which is just out of control," McAfee said.

Producers and consumers of raw milk say they were not told about the change until after the new law passed quietly earlier this year.

Others states already have adopted the 10-coliform standard, and supporters of the stricter standard say it will not necessarily spell trouble for the raw-milk industry.

"Raw milk is legal in California and continues to be legal in California," said Lyle, adding that testing showed that raw-milk producers can meet the new standard.

ing nearby might have guessed they were prisoners of some sort. It has become routine, this daily march of the deported.

"Pass right this way," bellowed Rene Mendez, trying to comfort his weary companions while adhering to a tight schedule. "Bievenidos. Good afternoon. Welcome, muchachos."

In 2004, the United States deported 7,029 Guatemalans; in 2005, it deported 11,512; in 2006, it deported 18,305.

This year, the numbers had surpassed 21,000 by early this month.

Lori Haley, a spokeswoman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, said depor-

"My brother has lived there for almost two years, going to the street corner for work," Morales said. "Later, he found a job in a restaurant. He said if I wanted to come there for a year, he would find me work."

He said his older brother sent photographs and money to his family in Chichicastenango. He bought land and had a three-story concrete house built for when he returns.

Domingo tried to join him. But he had hardly crossed the infamous Sonoran Desert into Arizona when border agents picked him up and put him on track for an expedited deportation.

Next, here he was, fresh off his first — albeit involuntary — plane ride, waiting for Mendez to call out the numbers of the luggage piled in the center of the other plane was landing, with 88 more men and 16 more women to process.

One organization passed out bagged lunches. Another offered bus vouchers to help deportees get to their far-flung hometowns.

There was a table to pick up information about possible job opportunities, but otherwise they were left to fend for themselves.

The Guatemalan government began expanding the scope of its deportee arrival process earlier this year in an effort to make the system more dignified, but officials there have argued that deportees are still putting a significant burden on the country because it is difficult to reintegrate them into the economy.

And of those deported from the United States last year, more than 3,000 faced jail time in the

"I have to think a lot about what I'm going to do now," he said.

Another man had lived in Long Island for so long — since he was 11 years old — that he had no idea what to do in Guatemala.

"I want to know where the American Embassy is and stuff like that," he said in English, with a New York accent, declining to give his name.

Two other men, speaking in separate interviews, sported splashes of white paint on their forearms. A few days earlier, they were staying at a Texas detention facility when a guard ordered them to come out and paint a wall in the middle of the night, from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m., they said.

the zoo's director of animal care and conservation. He said he was at a loss to explain Tatiana's escape and was "astounded" to hear of it.

Police encountered the tiger outside the cafe as she was mauling a blood-covered person, San Francisco police Sgt. Steve Mannina said.

When officers tried to intervene, the tiger turned and headed toward them, and several officers fired numerous shots at the tiger.

Officials did not identify the victims, but KCBS radio reported that the tiger attacked two brothers, 18 and 19, and killed a 23-year-old man who was their friend. The survivors were taken to San Francisco General Hospital with critical injuries.

The zoo, festooned with holiday decorations, was silent after the attacks, save for police helicopters and police officers sweeping the grounds for other victims.

Some zoo employees locked themselves in the gift shop, as they had been instructed to do in an emergency. They declined to comment, as did other employees huddled near an entrance hours after the attack.

"We won't know until tomorrow whether this was negligence or intentional or how the tiger got out," Mannina said.

Safety measures can help only so much when dealing with predators such as tigers, said Chris Austria, an animal trainer who has worked with tigers at Marine World in Vallejo and with bears at the San Francisco Zoo. Much like indoor domesti-very interested in the world, Austria said. The attack likely had nothing to do with hunger, he said.

"There's a mix of and fear," he said. "The state is not to be manipulated. The attack also shows zoo visitors need to be just like animal trainers said."

"I really support 2 think they do a great said, 'but accidents will happen.'"

"San Francisco Zoo ways been very safety-conscious and well-trained," he said. "When they're working animals, they're very hard to control. When they escape habitats, they can be aggressive."

According to the zoo site, Tatiana shared an enclosure with the zoo's Siberian tiger, Tony, near House. It also has three trans tigers at the west entrance Lion House.

The attack occurred year after Tatiana, who 350 pounds, attacked ously injured keeper Loojan's arm during a regular noon feeding at the Lion House.

The state division of tion Safety and Health was responsible for that because of poor training way the tiger cages were closed.

The zoo closed the House for renovations not open it until September. "This is a tragic event," said Lt. Ken the San Francisco Fire department. "We pride ourselves on our city for all the beautiful

Sand

The "sand pirates" case was different. It was covered by a tugboat captain, described by attorneys as a blue-collar guy with a knack for putting things together.

"This guy is a rough-around-the-edges waterfront tugboat captain," said assistant attorney general Christopher Ames. "He's not your guy sitting in the office, wearing a tie and having lunch with the Rotary Club."

The deceit, state lawyers said, largely was uncovered by Bartoo and his lawyers, Francine Radford and former federal prosecutor Wayne Lamprey, and state prosecutors.

Not only were the companies underreporting the amount of sand they were mining, they were mining outside of the areas permitted by their leases — in effect stealing that sand, prosecutors said.

By calculating royalties in a way that ensured payments to the state remained relatively flat, even during the economic boom of the 1990s, the companies short-changed the state out of millions.

"The price of sand went up and up, but the state wasn't sharing in that because of what these companies were doing," Lamprey said.

Jeffrey Ross, a lawyer for the defendants, said the amount of sand mined outside of lease areas and the amount of alleged underreporting were small. And company officials were led to think that their pricing practices were appropriate after the State Lands Commission audited leases in 2000 and 2001, he said.

"Why didn't that come to light when there was an audit?" he asked.

Ross questioned why Bartoo got such a large share of the settlement, but state lawyers said the irregularities likely would never have come to light without Bartoo's involvement.

"We probably would not have received dollar one if he didn't do this," Ames said.

WHISTLE-BLOWER CASES

Tugboat captain Kevin Bartoo received the second-highest whistle-blower award under the 1988 California False Claims Act. Under a deal approved Dec. 6 in Contra Costa Superior Court, he will get $12 million of a $42.2 million settlement from sand-mining companies.

The only California whistle-blower to collect more was Patrick Stull, a former Bank of America vice president who in 1999 collected $22 million of a $187.5 million settlement for bringing forward information that showed the bank was pocketing unclaimed proceeds from bonds that should have been returned to state and local governments.

Those two cases amount to more than half of non-Medi-Cal fraud cases.

The state has collected $325 million in non-Medi-Cal fraud whistle-blower cases and at least an additional $218 million in Medi-Cal fraud cases for a total of at least $543 million. The Medi-Cal fraud figures go back just to settlements reached since 2000, so the actual figure is higher.

Meanwhile, individual whistle-blowers have collected $56 million from non-Medi-Cal fraud cases and at least an additional $30 million from Medi-Cal fraud, for a total of more than $85 million.

charge of prosecuting most whistle-blower cases, said that Bartoo's unusually high share of the settlement — 27 percent — was due to his key contributions to the case.

The case involved two sand-mining companies, their on-shore affiliates and a global construction-materials powerhouse called Hanson Aggregates that bought the other companies in 1999. Hanson's regional headquarters are in Pleasanton.

Bartoo told state officials that companies were underreporting the amount of sand they were taking and therefore probably underpaying royalties.

But other inconsistencies also bothered him. He had heard figures that led him to think the companies' profits were excessive.

"If there was that much money in sand, why wasn't there more competition?" he wondered.

At the time, he was unaware of the California False Claims Act, the 1988 state law modeled on a Civil War-era federal law meant to encourage employees to come forward with information when taxpayers are being scammed.

A staff member at the commission told him about the law, and he eventually hired lawyers and spent the next year investigating and documenting the companies' actions.

"The risk that these guys take and the heat they take as whistle-blowers is no small thing," Ames said.

In at least one case, Hanson corrected the sand-mining practices of the companies it bought before Bartoo's allegations came to light, suggesting that officials knew the conduct was wrong and fixed the problem.

Bartoo said he and others routinely mined in areas that were not leased to the companies because their supervisors told them to and the employees were unaware of lease boundaries.

"Our mining was strictly driven by quality of material," Bartoo said. "As far as we knew, it was all fair game."

But after it bought the other companies, Hanson required the crews to stay within lease boundaries.

Meanwhile, court papers show that Hanson continued calculating royalties in a manner that lowered payments to the state until 2004, after the lawsuit was filed.

Court papers say that since the early 1990s, one of the companies began selling sand at one price to on-shore affiliates, which would then sell the sand to customers at a higher price, in some cases for more than three times as much.

The companies used the lower figures to calculate royalty payments, depriving the state of significant revenue.

The companies also structured the price of sand sold directly to third parties to include a line-item for the sand itself, with other charges such as transportation added on.

But the companies only used the line-item for sand to calculate royalty payments.

"The effect of these changes was to reduce the royalties paid to the state, although the total amounts invoiced to the customers increased," Contra Costa Superior Court Judge Terence Bruiniers ruled last year in the first of what was to be two trials.

Bruiniers' order was mixed, endorsing neither the state's nor the companies' interpretation of the leases. But he did rule that the companies' pricing structures were unreasonable.

Bartoo said he has no specific plans for the money he will receive. He does not even sound excited about his pending wealth.

Instead, he comes across as weary and philosophical. Years of frustrating litigation and the sometimes-hostile reactions from co-workers wore on him. Bartoo, who grew up in the Oakland hills dreaming about working on the Bay, said he is more interested in owning his time than anything else.

"The overall experience to me was disillusioning," he said.

Though no longer employed directly by Hanson, Bartoo has been doing the same work for a contractor.

"Being a whistle-blower is not easy, but it is one of the few effective remedies available to ordinary citizens for stemming corporate greed," he said.

His advice for would-be whistle-blowers?

"Be certain you're right, and be certain it's egregious," he said. "You have to maintain the high ground, and you better have maintained it all your life. ... I'm convinced you can't do it for the money. You have to do it because it's right."

'Urban guerrillas' escalate violence in riot near Paris

■ Police arrest 22 youths, say some fired on officers north of capital city

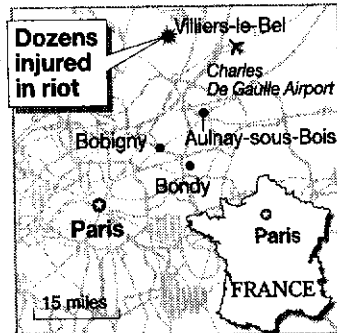

By Nicolas Garriga

ASSOCIATED PRESS

VILLIERS-LE-BEL, France — Youths rampaged for a third night in the tough suburbs north of Paris, and violence spread to a southern city late Tuesday as police struggled to contain rioters who have burned cars and buildings and — in an ominous turn — shot at officers.

A senior police union official warned that "urban guerrillas" had joined the unrest, saying the violence was worse than during three weeks of rioting that raged around French cities in 2005, when firearms were rarely used.

Bands of young people set more cars on fire in and around Villiers-le-Bel, the Paris suburb where the latest trouble first erupted, and 22 youths were taken into custody, the regional government said. In the southern city of Toulouse, 20 cars were set ablaze and fires at two li-vious nights. About 1,000 officers patrolled trouble spots in and around Villiers-le-Bel on Tuesday, he said.

The government was striving to keep violence from spreading in what was shaping up as a stern test for new President Nicolas Sarkozy. The unrest showed that anger still smolders in France's poor neighborhoods, where many Arabs, blacks and other minorities live largely isolated from the rest of society.

The trigger of the violence was the deaths Sunday of two minority teens when their motorscooter collided with a police car in Villiers-le-Bel, a blue-collar town on Paris' on the scene until firefighters arrived.

Rioting and arson quickly erupted after the crash. The violence worsened Monday night as it spread from Villiers-le-Bel to other impoverished suburbs north of the French capital. Rioters burned a library, a nursery school and a car dealership, and they tried to set some buildings on fire by crashing burning cars into them.

Officials have pledged tough punishment for rioters: Eight people were convicted Tuesday in fast-track trials and sentenced to three to 10 months in prison, the regional government said.

Police reinforcements were moved into trouble spots north of Paris on Tuesday. Helicopters flew overhead, shining powerful spotlights into apartment buildings to keep people from leaving their homes.

"The situation is under control," said Denis Joubert, director of public safety for the region surrounding Villiers-le-Bel.

Prime Minister Francois Fillon, who was briefed by police in Villiers-le-Bel, said things were "much calmer than the previous two nights."

U.S. frustrates proposal for binding emissions cut

■ Bush administration achieves key victory at U.N. climate conference

By Juliet Eilperin
WASHINGTON POST

BALI, Indonesia — U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon conceded Wednesday the United States had succeeded in achieving one of its key objectives at the climate conference here, blocking a proposal that called on industrialized nations to cut their greenhouse gas emissions by 25 percent to 40 percent by 2020.

Having jettisoned the idea of incorporating specific emissions targets in the framework that will guide international climate talks over the next two years, participants were hoping to find other ways to make meaningful progress here in the two-week-long meeting of nearly 190 nations.

Ki-moon, who told reporters the U.N. initial negotiating proposal submitted to the conference might have been "too ambitious," said he and others would work to ensure any climate pact finalized in 2009 will be much more specific than the consensus document that is expected to come out of Bali.

"Practically speaking, this will have to be negotiated down the road," he said, adding that the proposal to cut emissions by at least 25 percent over the next dozen years reflected the current scientific consensus. "There needs to be a target, whether it's a short-term, medium- or long-term" goal.

The Bush administration's victory, which came even as a succession of foreign ministers took the podium to call for bolder action to fight global warming, sparked criticism from developing countries that are predicted to feel the greatest effects from a changing climate.

Robert Aisi, Papua New Guinea's U.N. ambassador, said he understood why American officials are reluctant to accept binding emissions goals unless rapidly industrializing nations like China, India and Brazil also commit to concrete efforts. But, he added, the United States and other Western nations are overlooking their historical role in producing greenhouse gases as they industrialized.

Several leaders of industrialized nations also called on the United States to embrace a specific emissions target now rather than later.

German environment minister, Sigmar Gabriel, told the delegates that the goal of reducing emissions by 30 percent by 2020 "should not be questioned. Otherwise the industrialized countries lose their credibility. And such a reduction by 30 percent by 2020 should also be acceptable to the United States of America."

San Francisco Zoo director defends response

► TIGER, from News 1

Already the two sides are posturing:
On Wednesday, zoo officials held a news conference ostensibly to announce the reopening of the zoo today after eight days of lockdown since the tiger killed one young man and injured the two others. But they used the media spotlight to refute Geragos' claims that zoo employees were hesitant to act when his clients frantically sought help from the rampaging tiger. To the contrary, zoo director Manuel Mollinedo told reporters, his employees were "heroic." (He couldn't elaborate on that heroism, unfortunately, he said, because of the ongoing investigation.)
But he did address the million-dollar question: Did the young men taunt the tiger? It's an assertion flatly denied by Geragos, who last made news in the Bay Area when he represented Scott Petersen, who was convicted in Redwood City in 2004 of murdering his wife. He also briefly represented pop star Michael Jackson.
Mollinedo — who has acknowledged that the tiger exhibit wall is four feet below national guidelines — indicated again that he believes that the tiger was taunted.
"All I know is that something happened to provoke that tiger to leap out of her exhibit," Mollinedo said. "The police are investigating it and until they can come up with some definitive answers, it would only be speculation on my part at this point."

The case has led to rumors published in the New York Post and elsewhere that one or more of the young men — brothers Paul and Kulbir Dhaliwal and their friend, 17-year-old Carlos Sousa Jr., who was killed — used slingshots to taunt the animal. But police told MediaNews on Wednesday they had no evidence of either.
Zoo employees did find an empty vodka bottle in the brothers' car, said the zoo's newest hire, Sam Singer, who has been the spokesman for such newsmakers as 49ers owners John and Denise DeBartolo York and the former mistress of San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom.
But whether the trio had been drinking before going into the zoo won't be known until after the results of toxicology tests are released, San Francisco police Sgt. Steve Mannina said.
The case has drawn scores of media, from NBC's "Today" show to CNN, to the zoo as well as to Pipe Dream Court, the east San Jose cul de sac full of tightly-packed duplexes where the Dhaliwals — ages 19 and 23 — live with their parents. But the Dhaliwals have kept their blinds shut and haven't answered knocks on their door. The brothers were reportedly reluctant to talk to police as well as to the Sousa family, who have tried repeatedly to talk to them about what happened at the zoo that day.
As much tragedy and intrigue surround the sensational case, legal experts say they wouldn't be surprised if the case never goes to court. Since the city of San Francisco will be the primary defendant, it is likely to settle.

But the case will revolve around two fundamental issues: liability and damages.
No matter what the young men might have done to provoke the tiger, legal experts say the zoo is responsible to keep the tiger confined. If it escapes, the zoo is "strictly liable," said Peter Keane, law professor at San Francisco's Golden Gate Law School.
"If you have a wild animal and you keep it and it gets out of your control, you're liable," said Peter Keane, law
professor at San Francisco's Golden Gate Law School.
However, he said, any evidence of taunting could influence how much the zoo pays out in damages to the victims.
If the case goes to court and a jury believes the men taunted the tiger and were partially responsible for the attack, the amount of the jury award can be reduced.
"If they just stood there and said,
'Nah nah nah nah nah, you're a lousy tiger,' that would be one thing," Keane said. "The taunting itself would have to be some kind of conduct that a reasonable person would know would be dangerous, like going up on top of the fence and trying to lure the thing out. It would have to be more than throwing peanut shells at the tiger."

Tugboat captain covers sand

Miner credited with saving taxpayers millions will receive state's second-largest whistle-blower reward

By Mike Taugher
STAFF WRITER

Poring over the logs of hundreds of voyages he made into San Francisco and Suisun bays, tugboat captain Kevin Bartoo knew something was wrong. The numbers were just too low. He knew he had mined more sand than the logs showed. It was not the first time he had seen the discrepancy. Once, in his employer's office, he was offered a brief look at the books. "All of a sudden, I realized now I have documentation of what I saw," Bartoo said. It was seven years ago and Bartoo, dismayed and anxious about a recent change in ownership at work, decided to call the agency that issues leases and collects royalties from sand companies. That phone call to the State Lands Commission set in motion six years of litigation and the discovery of what prosecutors say

"People came through. The generosity has been overwhelming."

Zoo plans to raise tiger wall

■ Current barrier about 3 feet less than recommended height in some areas

By Kristin Bender

STAFF WRITER

OAKLAND — In the wake of the recent tiger mauling at the San Francisco Zoo, the Oakland Zoo will also build a higher fence around its tiger pen.

The height of the wall at the Oakland Zoo that encloses two female tigers ranges from 13½ to 16 feet in different areas, Oakland Zoo Executive Director Joel Parrott said. There is a Bengal tiger weighing 230 pounds and a Siberian-Bengal mix weighing 305 pounds.

The Association of Zoos and Aquariums, a national accrediting body for zoos, recommends that walls around a tiger exhibit be at least 16.4 feet high. That is a guideline, not a requirement.

"It's not like the last foot or so is the difference between escape or no escape, but we are not interested in playing it that close," Parrott said Friday.

Following the Christmas Day attack, which killed a boy and badly injured two men, San Francisco Zoo officials acknowledged that the wall around the pen from which Tatiana the tiger escaped was just 12½ feet high. Zoo officials had previously said it was 18 feet high.

In Oakland, Parrott said zoo officials are discussing how much to raise the barriers and what materials to use.

There is currently a chain-link fence around most of the tiger pen. A concrete wall encloses about a quarter of the exhibit.

"As a result of (the San Francisco incident) we are going to make adjustments to increase it."

Storms to bash West Coast

Get ready — National Weather Service reports three major systems headed our way over next few days

By Dogen Hannah
STAFF WRITER

Winter is about to deliver a one-two-three punch to the Bay Area and the state.
Three storms packing lots of rain, snow and high winds are expected to pummel the entire West Coast one after the other today through the weekend.
"No one will be spared," said meteorologist Steve Anderson of the National Weather Service. Swooping down from the Gulf of Alaska, the unusual mix of heavy rain and severe winds could make the trio the worst to hit the area in two years.
"They are pretty powerful," much stronger winds than normal, Anderson said. Winds are expected to gust up to 30 miles per hour most days and up to 45 miles per hour on Friday during the strongest storm. Winds will be even stronger on the Bay and offshore.
"Not a good day to be on the water," Anderson said. The storms could raise the Bay Area's seasonal rainfall total at least to average.
Forecasters expect the storms to dump a total of between 2 inches and 4 inches of rain over the Bay Area with parts of the region getting much

Winter is about to deliver a one-two-three punch to the Bay Area and the state.
Three storms packing lots of rain, snow and high winds are expected to pummel the entire West Coast one after the other today through the weekend.
"No one will be spared," said meteorologist Steve Anderson of the National Weather Service. Swooping down from the Gulf of Alaska, the unusual mix of heavy rain and severe winds could make the trio the worst to hit the area in two years.
"They are pretty powerful," much stronger winds than normal, Anderson said. Winds are expected to gust up to 30 miles per hour most days and up to 45 miles per hour on Friday during the strongest storm. Winds will be even stronger on the Bay and offshore.
"Not a good day to be on the water," Anderson said. The storms could raise the Bay Area's seasonal rainfall total at least to average.
Forecasters expect the storms to dump a total of between 2 inches and 4 inches of rain over the Bay Area with parts of the region getting much

Bush uses 'pocket veto' against defense policy bill

■ President objects to provision that would 'imperil' Iraqi assets, setting up confrontation with Congress

By Ben Feller

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CRAWFORD, Texas — President Bush on Friday used a "pocket veto" to reject a sweeping defense bill because he dislikes a provision that would expose the Iraqi government to expensive lawsuits seeking damages from the Saddam Hussein era.

In a statement, Bush said the legislation "would imperil billions of dollars of Iraqi assets at a crucial juncture in that nation's reconstruction efforts."

The president's objections were focused on a provision deep within legislation that sets defense policy for the coming year and approves $696 billion in spending, including $189 billion for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Also in the legislation were improved veterans benefits and tighter oversight of contractors and weapons programs.

The pocket veto means that troops will get a 3 percent raise Jan. 1 instead of the 3.5 percent authorized by the bill.

Bush's decision to use a pocket veto, announced while vacationing at his Texas ranch, means the legislation will die at midnight Dec. 31. This tactic for killing a bill can be used only when Congress is not in session.

The House last week adjourned until Jan. 15; the Senate returns a week later but has been holding brief, often seconds-long pro forma sessions every two or three days to prevent Bush from making appointments that otherwise would need Senate approval.

Brendan Daly, spokesman for House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-San Francisco, said, "The House rejects any assertion that the White House has the authority to do a pocket veto."

When adjourning before Christmas, the House instructed the House clerk to accept any communications from the White House during the break.

A Democratic congressional aide pointed out that a pocket veto cannot be overridden by Congress and allows Bush to distance himself from the rejection of a major Pentagon bill in a time of war.

In a message to Congress, the president said he was sending the bill and his outline of objections to the House clerk "to avoid unnecessary litigation about the non-enactment of the bill that results from my withholding approval, and to leave no doubt that the bill is being vetoed."

Democratic aides said they have not ruled out any legislative options, including dropping the language on lawsuits against Iraq and sending the rest of the bill back to Bush.

The sponsor of the contested provision, Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said the provision would allow "American victims of terror to hold perpetrators accountable — plain and simple."

Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky called on lawmakers to "move rapidly to fix this section" when Congress returns in January so that the underlying bill can be signed.

Democratic congressional leaders complained that Bush's move was a last-minute stunt because he had never indicated his intention to veto the bill.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A car bomb exploded in the city's busiest intersection Friday, killing at least eight people and injuring 64 others, underscoring the violence still facing Iraq despite a steep drop in attacks in recent month.

Like a similar explosion last month at a popular pet market, the blast at central Baghdad's crowded Tahrir Square came on a day when many Iraqis were running errands and patronizing local vendors.

A 6-year-old boy and two teenagers were among those killed in the latest explosion, not far from one of the main, heavily guarded entrances to the Green Zone, police said. Officials provided conflicting numbers, with some putting the death toll as high as 14.

Witnesses told police that street vendors noticed a man in his late 20s parking his car

Town seeks to jail Bush, Cheney

By Dave Gram

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTPELIER, Vt. — President Bush may soon have a new reason to avoid left-leaning Vermont: In one town, activists want him subject to arrest for war crimes.

A group in Brattleboro is petitioning to put an item on a town meeting agenda in March that would make Bush and Vice President Cheney subject to arrest and indictment if they visit the southeastern Vermont community.

"This petition is as radical as the Declaration of Independence, and it draws on that tradition in claiming a universal jurisdiction when governments fail to do what they're supposed to do," said Kurt Daims, 54, a retired machinist leading the drive.

As president, Bush has visited every state except Vermont.

The town meeting, an annual exercise in which residents gather to vote on everything from fire department budgets to municipal policy, requires about 1,000 signatures to place a binding item on the agenda.

The measure asks: "Shall the Selectboard instruct the Town Attorney to draft indictments against President Bush and Vice President Cheney for crimes against our Constitution, and publish said indictment for consideration by other municipalities?"

The White House did not immediately respond to requests for comment Friday.

they're sitting there on death

It's sad you have to visit your go there) just to have a little peace, many times, when I find myself getting really, really upset it's time to go out to visit me.' If I go out there, for some reason, it calms me down and I feel

I actually thought prior to today? Why can't I have a clear thought?' Those are different stages you go through. In talking to other people, it seems that is just the course of what you go through.

NOTIFICATION OF APPLICATION FILING BY PACIFIC GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY (PG&E) FOR APPROVAL TO RECOVER IN RATES THE COST OF THE SMARTMETER PROGRAM UPGRADE

What is the SmartMeter Program Upgrade?

The SmartMeter Program Upgrade is a proposed upgrade to Pacific Gas & Electric Company's (PG&E) Advanced Metering Infrastructure (otherwise known as "SmartMeter") program. PG&E believes that the upgrade will provide benefits to our customers and further the State's energy conservation policies.

In Decision 06-07-027, the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) approved PG&E's current SmartMeter Program, which is installing advanced meter technology to allow PG&E to remotely read customer meters and to record hourly electricity use and daily gas use.

PG&E believes a few upgrades to its current SmartMeter Program are appropriate and timely. These recommended upgrades are consistent with the CPUC's desire to use advanced technology to enhance customer involvement in energy demand management and improve energy conservation throughout the state of California.

What is this Application filing about?

On December 12, 2007, PG&E filed an application with the CPUC, requesting authority to recover approximately $623 million in electric rates to upgrade PG&E's SmartMeter Program. The upgrades consist of:

- 1. an integrated load limiting connect/disconnect switch;
- 2. a ~~home area network (HAN)~~ gateway device to enable two-way communication of electricity data and prices with customer appliances and other devices; and
- 3. installing solid state meters that would support the previously-mentioned functionality

PG&E's request is for future rate recovery through electric distribution rates, beginning January 1, 2009, and continuing for 15 years. In this application PG&E is requesting cost recovery for the full cost of the SmartMeter Upgrade Project from customers.

Does this mean rates will increase?

Yes. Electric distribution rates will increase as early as January 1, 2009, for the SmartMeter Upgrade Project. The increase to electric distribution rates will increase charges for both bundled electric customers (customers who receive electric generation as well as transmission and distribution service from PG&E) and for customers that purchase electricity from other suppliers (e.g., direct access customers).

If the CPUC approves PG&E's request, bills for bundled electric customers who use less than 130% of their baseline allowance would not increase. The bill for a typical bundled customer using 550 kWh per month would increase $0.26 from $71.92 to $72.18. The bill for a typical bundled customer using approximately twice the average baseline allowance, or 850 kWh per month, would increase $1.87 from $149.03 to $150.90 per month. Individual customers' bills may differ.

PG&E will provide an illustrative allocation table of the increases among customer classes in its proposal in a bill insert to be mailed directly to customers beginning in January, 2008.

THE CPUC PROCESS

The CPUC's independent Division of Ratepayer Advocates (DRA) will review this application filing, analyze the proposal and present an independent analysis and recommendations for the CPUC's consideration. Other parties may also participate.

The CPUC may hold evidentiary hearings where the parties of record present their proposals in testimony and are subject to cross-examination before an Administrative Law Judge. These hearings are open to the public, but only those who are parties of record can present evidence or cross-examine witnesses during evidentiary hearings.

After considering all proposals and evidence presented during the hearing process, the CPUC will issue a draft decision. When the CPUC acts on this application, it may adopt all or part of PG&E's request, amend or modify it, or deny the application. The CPUC's final decision may be different from PG&E's proposed application filing.

DAROU FAL, Senegal — As a boy, Pathe Kane's family farmed a large plot of land on which sat deep lakes filled with wildlife.

In his youth, Ousman Sow wandered the land raising cattle with his Fulani nomad tribe. Over time, sand from the Sahara Desert drove Kane's family from its farm, and drought forced Sow's tribe to forego its nomadic lifestyle.

The Senegalese government believes the advance of the desert and the drought are results of climate change that are having a dramatic impact on several countries in Africa — forcing whole communities to relocate, changing entire lifestyles and making it harder for people to make a living.

"There were very, very deep lakes where people were doing fishing. All these depressed areas (valleys) were lakes originally," said Kane, 56, fondly recalling what his home was like during better times. "This area was so beautiful that the

for you if you're incapacitated and unable to do so yourself. Unless your significant other is named under this document, he or she will have no legal say in what happens to you. Family members will make the decisions.

DURABLE POWER OF ATTORNEY FOR PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

This document is used to appoint an agent to manage your money and other assets. Usually, this document is effective only if you are incapacitated. Again, unless your significant other is named in this document, he or she will have no legal say in managing your assets while you're incapacitated. However, this document does not cover the management of assets in a living trust, as explained below.

If you haven't signed this type of power of attorney (and/or created a living trust), your incapacity may cause a court proceeding known as a conservatorship to manage your assets. This means that you will pay attorneys' fees and you will have a court making some decisions on your behalf. There is the possibility that some unwanted relative will eventually be appointed as your financial representative in the conservatorship to make decisions about your property.

You may want to create and sign another document, known as a Nomination of Conservator, to name your significant other as the person to make your personal day-to-day living decisions if you are incapacitated.

WILL AND LIVING TRUST

A will is a legal document that names:

- ☐ Your legal representative at death
- ☐ The guardian of your children
- ☐ Who will inherit certain assets after you die

You can add trust provisions within your will to establish guidelines on how your assets are managed after your death. The assets controlled by your will may be subject to probate and are public knowledge.

A living trust is a legal document spelling out the management and distribution of your assets held within the trust both while you are alive and after you die. It is optional within your estate, but there are some special advantages to using a living trust for unmarried couples.

Assets held within a living trust may avoid the probate court altogether upon your death, while assets governed by your will usually do not.

A living trust also provides more privacy about your assets and your beneficiaries than a will. Wills

(and the assets governed by them) are available to the public through court records, whereas assets held in a living trust are confidential. With a will, your family members may receive notices and information about your estate that they wouldn't receive if you had a living trust. This can be very important if you're leaving all your assets to your significant other and none to your blood relatives.

Although living trusts are generally confidential, your state's laws may allow both trust beneficiaries and heirs who are not beneficiaries to receive a copy of your living trust document and asset information.

If you decide to use a living trust, you still need a will. If you don't have a will and living trust in place, your state's laws will effectively take over and name your beneficiaries. Your significant other will not be on the state's preferred list of beneficiaries; your blood relatives are the favored choices.

In other words, without a will and trust in place, your loved one may be left out in the cold in more ways than one. If you're living together in your house or condo, the beneficiaries of the estate may insist that your loved one move out right away or start paying rent.

Your will and trust could address this situation according to your wishes.

NAMING GUARDIANS

If you do not have a will with a guardian appointment, your state gets into the act again in determining the guardians who will raise your minor children and manage assets on their behalf. However, if you've signed a will nominating guardians, the court will generally follow your choice.

There are two types of guardians:

- ☐ Guardians of the estate, who take care of your assets for your minor children
- ☐ Guardians of the person, who will take care of raising your minor children

Naming guardians is critical if you have children. Without an estate plan, assets passing to minor children will be subject to extra fees and court costs to pay for a guardianship to regulate them.

Once your children become adults they will receive their entire inheritance in one lump sum, usually at age 18, regardless of whether they are capable of handling the money. Your estate plan can avoid the court system and provide for a more orderly (and delayed) distribution of assets to your children.

HOLDING TITLE

Another issue to consider with your cohabitation partner is how the two of you hold title (ownership) to your assets. Title determines whether an asset is covered by your will or passes outside your will.

For example, if your will gives your assets to your children, but you own a house in joint tenancy with your significant other, the house will go to your co-owner and not to your children. Only the other assets will go to your children. Be sure to coordinate title to your assets with your will and/or living trust to get the desired result.

BENEFICIARY DESIGNATIONS

Not all of your assets are subject to your will or your living trust. Some assets, such as your life insurance, IRAs and 401(k) already have a beneficiary designation that generally dictates who inherits their proceeds. Such assets are said to "pass outside" of your will or living trust.

If you want your significant other to inherit assets having a beneficiary designation, complete a designation naming him or her as the primary beneficiary. Then be sure to make provisions for the payment of any estate tax due on these assets in your will or living trust.

Estate planning is a very complex area of personal finance filled with traps and illogical results if you do not proactively take the right steps. Do not hesitate in seeking out qualified professional assistance in dealing with your estate plans, as this is not a do-it-yourself subject area.
